

Blanks resource pack

Children with language or learning difficulties find things difficult to understand, especially questions.

Pitching your questions at the right level can help your child to respond.

We recommend blank levels to support families and schools at getting the level right. Commenting instead of asking questions can also help students not to feel under pressure.

We use blank level questions in our speech therapy sessions.

Included in this pack are:

- A bookmark for you to use as a prompt when reading stories with your child.
- Some examples of questions we might ask using stories you may have at home.

You can watch our 'Blank levels' video on our YouTube channel:
